Who should attend:

If you're currently teaching or planning to teach sex education in your schools, congregations, or communities, this training is for you:

- Teachers and educators
- Youth leaders and advocates
- Professionals or volunteers in community-based and youth-serving organizations

What does the training cover?

Climate Building

Use a group agreement and other techniques to create a safe, respectful learning space for all students.

Experiential Learning

Engage a variety of different learning styles and effectively achieve your learning objectives.

Values Clarification

Acknowledge and respect the multitude of personal values held by students in your group.

Personal Disclosure

Learn appropriate boundaries for sharing your personal information with students.

Responding to challenging questions and harassing comments

Learn a practical approach for responding to challenging questions and comments from students.

Why is this training important?

Attendance at the Foundations: Core Skills for Sex Ed training will improve your understanding of best practices for teaching an effective sex education program in your school, congregation, or community. The skills and tools you will receive can be applied to any evidence-based curriculum. You will learn strategies for empowering young people to make healthy and responsible decisions regarding sex and their bodies. Visit www.foundationstraining.org for more information.
